Women in Military Service
While many Australian women, particularly nurses, were accepted for military service in the First World War, only one woman from the Moreton Bay Region has so far been identified with a service record.

GREENUP, Dorothy Katherine (Kathleen)
Dorothy Katherine Greenup was the daughter of Edgar Brodie Greenup and Emily Hollingworth. At the time of the First World War, Edgar Greenup was chairman of the Redcliffe Shire Council and wife Emily and daughter Dorothy were very active in local affairs such as the local branch of the Red Cross. Dorothy enlisted at age 20 in December 1915 and was initially assumed to be a nurse. When the mistake was discovered on embarkation, Dorothy was assigned duties as a ward assistant on the hospital ship Kanowa. On arrival in Egypt Dorothy disembarked and was returned to Australia where she was discharged in Melbourne in May 1916. On her return to Redcliffe Dorothy joined the local Red Cross association and taught at the local school. She later married Rupert Wyndham in 1935. Dorothy died in 1973.
